ABSTRACT

The directory lists more than 400 private programs serving persons with autism in the United States. Public school programs and state-operated Mental Retardation/Developmental Disabilities institutions have been omitted. Programs are listed by state within eight geographical regions across the nation: New England, Mid Atlantic, Deep South, Appalachia, Great Lakes, Midwest, Southwest, and the West Coast. A brief description of each program is provided to indicate the nature of services available: group home, residential program, day program, vocational center, summer camp, diagnosis and evaluation services, etc. (CL)

NSAC
Dedicated to the education and welfare of children and adults with severe disorders of communication and behavior.

AUTISM is a severely incapacitating lifelong developmental disability that typically appears during the first three years of life. It occurs in approximately fifteen out of every 10,000 births and is four times more common in boys than girls. It has been found throughout the world in families of all racial, ethnic and social backgrounds. No known factors in the psychological environment of a child have been shown to cause autism.

The symptoms are caused by physical disorders of the brain. They include:

(1) Disturbances in the rate of appearance of physical, social and language skills.

(2) Abnormal responses to sensations. Any one or a combination of senses or responses are affected: sight, hearing, touch, balance, smell, taste, reaction to pain, and the way a child holds his or her body.

(3) Speech and language are absent or delayed, while specific thinking capabilities may be present.

(4) Abnormal ways of relating to people, objects and events.

Autism occurs by itself or in association with other disorders which affect the function of the brain such as viral infections, metabolic disturbances, and epilepsy.

It is important to distinguish autism from retardation or mental disorders since diagnostic confusion may result in referral to inappropriate and ineffective treatment techniques.

The severe form of the syndrome may include extreme self-injurious, repetitive, highly unusual and aggressive behavior.

Special educational programs using behavioral methods have proved to be the most helpful treatment.

Autism is treatable—early diagnosis and intervention are vital to the future development of the child.

NSAC Cares

The National Society for Children and Adults with Autism was founded in 1965 and is dedicated to the education and welfare of all persons with severe disorders of communication and behavior. With 7,000 individual members and almost 200 local chapters and state societies, NSAC reaches out across the nation to help these people and their families.

FOREWORD

This 5th edition of the Directory of Programs Serving Children and Adults with Autism reflects a quantitative and qualitative maturation in the field of program services for persons with autism. There are more services, both public and private, than ever before, and these services are more appropriate to the special needs of the autistic person due to great advances in personnel training and methodology research and replication.

Like the 4th edition of the Program List, this directory offers only a brief description of each program. NSAC plans to compile in the near future an Annotated Directory with more comprehensive characterizations of each program. At present, users of this list are advised to personally contact programs of interest and do their own homework in investigating suitability for their needs.

NSAC does not grant or imply endorsement of any program by its inclusion in this listing. Programs are listed as a service to our members by the NSAC Information and Referral Department. Readers are encouraged to contact their local NSAC chapter for a firsthand perspective about local programs. Contact the NSAC national office for the chapter nearest you.

The parameters for inclusion of a program in this listing are as follows:

- No public school class programs are included. Information on and referral to these programs are standardized and available through the local school district special education office.
- State-operated MR/DD institutions are likewise omitted.
- Predominantly, this is a listing of private programs (though these may often receive public funding). Awareness of these programs is limited, and NSAC's list is the only resource available that gathers together all these programs for persons with autism. Some government-operated programs have also been included, when such a program has a history of autism-specific services, or is otherwise of a special nature.

Programs listed vary in the degree to which they specialize in serving persons with autism. A significant portion are exclusively oriented toward serving the unique needs of persons with autism. Many programs, however, serve the autistic along with other developmentally disabled or otherwise handicapped clients. We have listed only those that provide services to a significant number of clients with autism—not an incidental one or two clients. Also, we have listed only programs that are able to appropriately serve the special needs of autism, rather than those primarily oriented toward serving other handicaps that an autistic person might have (such as mental retardation). Information about programs for the mentally retarded that can also serve the autistic (such as county-run adult activity centers and other MR/DD programs) can be obtained elsewhere from state or local social service agencies.

Programs are listed by state within geographical regions across the nation in order to facilitate ease of searching for the reader. Check the table of contents for quick reference for a particular state.

Geographical restrictions for program eligibility only apply if specified (i.e., county, city, or state residents only). Most day programs specify that clients reside within one hour, or a reasonable commute from the program site.

Readers are cautioned that many programs have waiting lists for admittance, and should be contacted well in advance.

NSAC was unable to determine pertinent information on any programs in the following states: Alaska, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota and Wyoming. Consequently, they are not listed in this directory. Any information about programs in these areas should be addressed to the editor, in care of the national office.

DEFINITION OF TERMS

Following are the terms used in this directory to describe programs. These definitions are the commonly understood meanings of the terms.

Day Program: an educational and/or other therapeutic service provided during the daytime only.

Residential Program: an overnight facility with residents usually receiving educational services during the day and self-care, behavior modification, recreation, etc. services before and after school.

Group Home: a community-based, family size residence offering independent living skills training. During the day residents usually go to school or vocational programs off-premises in the community.

Respite: short-term (a night, weekend, week) residential facility providing families with a break. May provide training/education or merely personal attention.

Preschool/Infant Enrichment/Early Childhood Stimulation: ages birth through five, providing developmental therapy, usually employing parents as co-therapists.

Parent-Training: professionally taught hands-on instruction of parents and families, usually utilizing behavior modification techniques, to complement school-based programming with continuity at home.

Vocational: adolescent ("Pre-Voc") and adult work skills training offered in different settings dependent upon functioning level.

- Adult activity centers offer elementary tasks (often crafts) for the severely retarded.
- Sheltered workshops operate like a cottage industry and offer piece-rate assembly task training.
- Competitive employment and job placement offer moderate to higher functioning clients on-site training eventually for wage-paying tasks, under close supervision by a counselor.

Diagnosis/Assessment/Evaluation: professional determination of developmental status and prognosis for purposes of appropriate program services.

Recreation: a Saturday, summer, or evening therapeutic sports/play program.

Summer Camp: day or overnight, often combining recreational with educational activities.
